

A vote on June 2, without public input or comment on the final rule changes, is unwarranted and unnecessary. Reports in the media about the proposal are insufficiently detailed, but they are frightening in the extreme. Proposals that permit even greater consolidation of media undermine a vibrant democracy. The many cable channels airing today do not constitute competition.